TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.
Sir,

I have the honour to call the attention of the Council of the British Association for the Advancement of Science to the large marks by which the Council's authority and its action are frequently overthrown.

Yours, etc.,

The British Association for the Advancement of Science is a learned society that promotes the advancement of science through meetings, conferences, and publications. The text refers to the council's authority and action being overthrown by large marks, which suggests a need for the council to address these issues to maintain its reputation and effectiveness.

The text also mentions the need for a system of marking and testing in schools, which is a common concern in the history of education, aiming to ensure fair and accurate assessment.

Yours faithfully,
